3. Go to the section 'Listing by block'
4. Find the block number
5. Listings in this section are by house number, find the house number of your neighbor.

Neighborhood Watch Guidelines

- 1. Be alert: Look and listen. Take note of suspicious activities or persons. Trust your instincts! Pay attention to details by observing people, cars, clothing, weapons, activities.
- 2. Dial 911 direct: report the problem at once to authorities
- 3. Answer all questions: Help police by providing answers to all the questions that are asked. Information which you may think not important may actually provide the link that law enforcement needs to catch the bad guy! Remain on the line to provide additional details - or guide officers to the scene.

If you feel that something is wrong, don't hesitate to call police!

Early History of Highland Park

In 1887, when Clydie Landrum was born to Sam and Laura Landrum, Creek Indians, it was the policy of the United States Government to encourage Indians to take an allotment of land and live on it as individual families instead of in tribes. In 1903, at the young age of sixteen, Clydie was considered a freedman and was given by the United States Government 160 acres (which now is bounded by Yale Avenue, 31st Street, Hudson Avenue and 36th Street). There were many rules and restrictions that went with this allotment for twenty five years. Since Clydie was a minor, her mother, Laura, was made her guardian. Laura, in the meantime, divorced Sam and remarried.

In 1903, the same year Clydie received her allotment, she married Sylvester Howard. They had no children. Eight years later, Clydie died, leaving as possible heirs her mother Laura, now married for her third time, Sam her father (an illiterate unable to sign his name), and her husband Sylvester Howard (apparently a white man since he is referred to as a foreigner and later is declared ineligible as her heir because of this) Clydie had no will and there are no records of court action determining that she would heir the property.

Sam, the father, took it upon himself to sell all of the property without advising the other two. Sylvester, the husband, assuming he owned half of the property, sold it to another party, also without advising the other two. Laura, the mother and guardian of Clydie, assuming she had total ownership, continued to live on the property.

In the meantime, the new owners and their heirs had borrowed money on it, granted oil and gas right leases, had it heavily mortgaged for nonpayment of debts and had begun to harass Laura about ownership. Laura started a series of litigations that went on for years trying to straighten out the problems. The court eventually declared her sole heir to the 160 acres.

In 1922, Laura sold her 160 acres for $150.00 per acre ($22,950.00 total) with clear ownership and title, but there had been so many mortgages on it that the new owners were forced to sell it in public auction to pay the creditors. The sale brought only $50.00 per acre or $8000.00 (approximately the appraised value of the 160 acres in 1935).

After changing hands two more times, a widow, Evelyn M. English bought the 160 acres for the purpose of breaking it up in lots for residences. With Bert McElroy as one of her attorneys, she had the records publicized, and through all the court proceedings, as late as 1949, had all titles declared free of all other claims. She presumably name the area Yorkshire Estates from a colleague, A. E. York. Her only two restrictions for the subdivision at the time were no persons of African descent and buildings must be of stone, brick or stucco.

The land was broken up into lots, and grew into a small town that was incorporated as Highland Park, Oklahoma in 1946. A board of trustees was elected, and the following people served: D. M. Hawkins, President; Norman Jones, Vice-President; Charles Ridley, R. G. Luttrell, F. P. Lewis and Ramola Luttrell was Town Clerk. In 1955, the residents petitioned to join the City of Tulsa, and after a very bitter battle, the mayor of Tulsa called a special election for the citizens to vote on it. The response was 24,000 for and 14, 000 against.
